- Speakers are encouraged to use the SCMR Annual Scientific Sessions PowerPoint slide template here.

Fonts

- Highly recommended fonts to use include Times New Roman, Arial, and Tahoma.
- Usage of fonts not included in Windows can lead to words that bleed into graphics or bullet points that may be of the wrong style.
- Any fonts other than those not included in Windows will need to be embedded into your PowerPoint presentation.

- If you are creating your presentation on an Apple computer, please be aware of the following matters:
 - Movies
 - QuickTime movies may not play during your presentation.
 - It is highly recommended to convert your video files to .mp4 (h.264) to allow for proper operation in PowerPoint for Mac or PC.

Oral Presentations

Basic Presentation Guidelines

1. Review the title of your session and the other presentations within your session in the online program here to understand the context in which you are presenting.
2. Time limits will be strictly enforced by the moderators. Please refer to pages 4-5 for your allotted times.

Case Presenters:

- For effective coverage of the contents of your case, we suggest that you focus on the role of CMR to make the diagnosis, leaving clinical and laboratory presentation with limited slides.
- Deliver a clear and substantive underlying take-home message from your case.

Abstract Presenters:

- For effective coverage of the contents of your abstract, we suggest that you focus on the methods and results of your work, leaving background and discussion to a minimum.
- Remember that the interest lies on how you did your work and what you achieved as result of that – spend time on new evidence. Usually the audience will already have enough information on motivation and the background at which your work is advancing current knowledge.

Quick Fire Presenters:

- For effective coverage of the contents of your abstract, a maximum of four slides should be used, typically including Title/Methods/Results/Conclusions. A conflict-of-interest slide should not be presented, as this information should be contained in the accompanying poster.
